New poll finds Canadians divided on where to sell legal marijuana, minimum age

FILE - In this July 1, 2017 file photo, a cashier rings up a marijuana sale at the Essence cannabis dispensary in Las Vegas. (AP Photo/John Locher)

Josh Dehaas, CTVNews.ca Writer @JoshDehaas

Published Saturday, August 5, 2017 10:10PM EDT Last Updated Saturday, August 5, 2017 10:11PM EDT

The legalization of recreational marijuana may be less than a year away, but Canadians remain divided about such fundamentals as where it should be sold, what the legal minimum age of consumption should be and whether the provinces or Ottawa should take the lead, according to a new poll.

· Scroll down or click here to vote in our poll of the day

The Nanos Research poll of 1,000 adult Canadians, conducted for CTV News, found that about three in 10 people (27.6 per cent) agree that the minimum age of consumption should be set at 18, while another three in 10 (29.5 per cent) believe that the age should be set at 21. Smaller numbers say that the age limit should be something else or that marijuana should remain illegal.

RELATED STORIES

Liberals introduce legislation to legalize marijuana by July 2018

Some of the highlights from Thursday's suite of Liberal potlegalization bills

CMAJ editorial blisters Liberal government over age limit in legalized-pot plan The federal government's proposed legislation would limit sales to people age 18 and older while allowing provinces to set higher minimum ages. Some medical groups have been urging the minimum age to be set at 21 because human brains still develop into a person's 20s.

Canadians also seem split on where marijuana should be sold, according to the poll. While 29 per cent say "it doesn't make any difference ... as long as there are rules and regulations that control access," an almost equal number agree that it should be sold only in provincially-owned government outlets (25 per cent) as the number who want it sold in non-government stores, like pharmacies and specialty shops (26 per cent). The rest say it should remain illegal or are unsure.

When it comes to which government should set the rules, 57 per cent say the federal government should take the lead, 32 per cent say it should be up to the provinces and 11 per cent are unsure.

The poll results are based on an RDD dual frame (landline and cellphone) hybrid telephone and online random survey of 1,000 Canadians between July 23 and July 26. The margin of error for a random survey of 1,000 Canadians is ±3.1 percentage points, 19 times out of 20.

MOST WATCHED

bus tragedy

CTV National News: Fallout over deadly protest

3 4

CTV National News Clinton sightings

Where should legal marijuana be sold?

Government-owned stores Pharmacies or specialty shops
Anywhere
Nowhere

View result View the latest polls

Related Article

New poll finds Canadians divided on where to sell legal marijuana, minimum age

MORE STORIES FROM POLITICS

RCMP shortages leave Mounties in 'crisis,' officers say

Canada's 10 NAFTA demands: A list of what Canada wants as talks start this week Two Canadians killed in Burkina Faso restaurant attack UPDATED From labour standards to red tape, Canada outlines broad NAFTA goals Calgary Liberal MP Kang accused of sexual harassment Industry lobbies Liberals ahead of NAFTA talks

Use of this Website assumes acceptance of Terms & Conditions and Privacy Policy

© 2017 Bel Media All rights reserved.